A Friend Visits Hong Kong

Yes, you read the title right! Either that you are that friend or you're just a curious reader or any friend of mine. Well, it doesn't matter! I've caught your eye anyways, so it's time to dive in!

My Friend Sarah visited Hong Kong last Sunday. So, after meeting her at the airport, we immediately headed to shopping! Sarah seemed to be interested in some of the clothes at the lady's market. I shrugged it off and followed along. The street was packed with people, as Sarah had grabbed my hand and pulled me along enthusiastically. I just had to entered the mall for a few minutes. At least that was my original thought process. We finally got out of there for what felt like hours of jostling with shoppers here and there. I was starving so I asked Sarah if she wanted to eat anything specific. She bluntly replied with the word noodles, so I just dragged her to the nearest restaurant.

After the waiters sat us down, they handed us the menu. There were so many things I wanted to try, yet so little time to do so. We eventually ordered noodles. Predictable I know. It didn't take long before our food arrived, I couldn't wait to try it. After Sarah took a picture and we both started eating. It tasted amazing, forgetful but repeatable, we left. Sarah told me she wanted to watch a movie. Okay, surely this can't go wrong.

And we arrived at the cinema, looking at the menu choices. Sarah had watched a movie called Wonder Dog and wanted to watch it again. Why not? It seemed cute. After we got tickets, we patiently waited. It didn't take long before it was called. We sat down at our seat numbers and waited for the movie to start. A few minutes later it started. I was not going to support anything, but I was slightly shaken up. The style was a mix of cartoon and realism. Let me tell you, the monster looked horrifying.

To end the day, we played Monopoly at my house. Sarah won! I dropped her back at the airport and waved goodbye. It was a pretty eventful Sunday, okay I admit I liked the Wonder Dog.

I hope you like this blog post. I'll see you next time!
